^{*} Business use of the home must be used regularly and exclusively to be deductible. This type of deduction is often regularly checked by the IRS. Maintain adequate records. Your preparer may ask you a lot of information for this deduction. Alternately, the IRS has a "Safe Harbor Method" of $5 per square foot of home office space, up to 300 square feet, which may be easier to report and doesn't involve depreciation of the home or apportioning expenses.

^{*} Business vehicle expenses are complex. Your preparer may ask you for more information in order to prepare your return. Business mileage cannot be taken with actual expenses except for parking fees, tolls, and the like; they are mutually exclusive.

^{} Business miles should be logged – at the minimum – with a mileage log showing date, miles, and business purpose for each trip. The IRS does not allow a deduction for undocumented mileage. If there are multiple vehicles, please tell your preparer.
